The next four questions are based on the following passage:

Orientalism is a style of thought based upon an ontological and epistemological distinction made between "the Orient" and (most of the time) "the Occident." ... Orientalism can be discussed and analyzed as the corporate institution for dealing with the Orient—dealing with it by making statements about it, authorizing views of it, describing it, by teaching it, settling it, restructuring, and having authority over the Orient. ... Without examining Orientalism as a discourse one cannot possibly understand the enormously systematic discipline by which European culture was able to manage—and even produce—the Orient politically, sociologically, militarily, ideologically, scientifically, and imaginatively during the post-Enlightenment period.

8. What is the argument of the passage?
- (A) The Orient and the Occident are exact opposites of each other.
 - (B) European scholars have focused on the sociopolitical realities of the Orient
 - (C) European universities do not have enough classes in Eastern culture

The next three questions are based on the extract below:

The telling of tales is often thought to be characteristic of all human discourse, and it is fashionable to speak of narrative as a universal form of expression, one that is applied both to the life experiences of individuals and to the dramas of social interaction. Storytelling in oral cultures in turn is seen as the foundation on which the novel is built in literate ones, and the activity is regarded as the focus of much creativity. Blind Homer was the model, putting all his non-literate imagination into the epic. In discussing storytelling we are clearly leading into the topics of fiction and the novel. But not all storytelling is fictional; it can also involve personal narratives. However, although typically it is associated with oral cultures, with "the singer [or teller] of tales," in his article on the subject, Walter Benjamin sees storytelling disappearing with the arrival of the novel, whose dissemination he associates with the advent of printing, and no longer directly linked with experience in the same way as before.

13. Which of the following statements about story telling is/are true?

The next four questions are based on the passage given below. For the first two questions, two statements referred to as "Assertion" and "Reason" are given in each of the questions. Choose the best alternative from among the comments given below the question.

The questions I seek to ask here are about the relationship between caste and the English language, the two phenomena that represent considerably antithetical signs. Caste, an institution that defines tradition and inheritance, combines, through translation, with the modern and secular discourse of the English language. Dalit writers, as we see in the section that follows, appear to accept English as a target language, despite the fact that trenchantly local realities and registers of caste are difficult to couch in a language that has no memory of caste. The discussion shows how English promises to dalit writers (at least in theory), as both individuals and (however problematically) as representatives of communities, agency, articulation, recognition, and justice. It would seem that the inherent inadequacies of English as a target language of translation for dalit literature are compensated by it being a language of global dissemination. The two sections that follow draw attention to the multiplicity of contexts that make writing by dalits part of a literary public sphere in India, and contribute to our thinking about caste issues in the context of human rights.

16. Assertion: The author is of the opinion that Dalit writers should write in English.
Reason: The modern and secular discourse of English can obliterate the ill effects of caste system.

- (A) Both Assertion and Reason are true.
- (B) Assertion is true, but Reason is not true.

Mowgli stood upright—the fire pot in his hands. Then he stretched out his arms, and yawned in the face of the Council; but he was furious with rage and sorrow, for, wolflike, the wolves had never told him how they hated him. “Listen you!” he cried. “There is no need for this dog’s jabber. Ye have told me so often tonight that I am a man (and indeed I would have been a wolf with you to my life’s end) that I feel your words are true. So I do not call ye my brothers any more, but sag [dogs], as a man should. What ye will do, and what ye will not do, is not yours to say. That matter is with me; and that we may see the matter more plainly, I, the man, have brought here a little of the Red Flower which ye, dogs, fear.”

He flung the fire pot on the ground, and some of the red coals lit a tuft of dried moss that flared up, as all the Council drew back in terror before the leaping flames.

Mowgli thrust his dead branch into the fire till the twigs lit and crackled, and whirled it above his head among the cowering wolves.

The next six questions are based on the following poem:

Southern trees bear strange fruit,
Blood on the leaves and blood at the root,
Black bodies swinging in the southern breeze,
Strange fruit hanging from the poplar trees.

Pastoral scene of the gallant south,
The bulging eyes and the twisted mouth,
Scent of magnolias, sweet and fresh,
Then the sudden smell of burning flesh.

Here is fruit for the crows to pluck,
For the rain to gather, for the wind to suck,
For the sun to rot, for the trees to drop,
Here is a strange and bitter cry.

The next two questions are based on the following extract from Jawaharlal Nehru's The Discovery of India:

The discovery of India – what have I discovered? It was presumptuous of me to imagine that I could unveil her and find out what she is today and what she was in the long past.... is a geographical and economic entity, a cultural unity amidst diversity, a bundle of contradictions held together by strong but invisible threads. Overwhelmed again and again, her spirit was never conquered, and today when she appears to be the plaything of a proud conqueror, she remains unsubdued and unconquered. About her there is the elusive quality of a legend of long ago; some enchantment seems to have held her mind. She is a myth and an idea, a dream and a vision, and yet very real and present and pervasive.

94. This extract contains a concept centrally associated with the Nehruvian project. Which is it?
- ☒ (A) The mysteriousness of India
 - ☐ (B) The unity in India's diversity
 - ☐ (C) The progress of modern India
 - ☐ (D) The antiquity of India's culture
95. Which among the following is the best characterization of the dominant tone of the extract?
- ☐ (A) One of retrospection, as befits an epilogue
 - ☐ (B) One of joyous anticipation, as befits a prologue
 - ☒ (C) One of argument, as befits a debate
 - ☐ (D) One of contestation, as befits a research hypothesis
